

The Palmer Divide effect

Northerly winds push air over the Palmer Divide, where it cools. Cities near the divide may get a lot of snow, while cities slightly south may get little or none.

Higher, colder air can hold less moisture, which is released in the form of snow.

